

Exercise Hieroglyphics

The Egyptian culture used pictures for written communication. The pictures were called hieroglyphics. They can be seen on the Pyramids of Giza, one of the original Seven Wonders of the World, and an honorary finalist in the 2007 New Seven Wonders of the World selection.

The purpose of the game is to travel as quickly as possible to the four walls of the gymnasium, choose a number, draw the exercise hieroglyphic in the corresponding box, and complete the exercise the number of times designated at the bottom of the square by the teacher. Each time a drawing and exercise are completed, the student or group must move to a different wall and find a new exercise to do and draw. This continues until the card is complete, with drawers and exercisers alternating with each new hieroglyphic.

The card may be modified to have fewer or more squares, depending upon time and space. The teacher must remember that if he/she uses a student paper with 16 spaces, then 16 hieroglyphics must be made and placed around the four walls. For safety reasons, do not let students travel with pencils or pens. Supply washable markers that are capped.

Exercise Hieroglyphics Game

Basic Rules:

1. You do not have to travel to the numbers in any certain order. The teacher will designate how to travel (example: power walk, jog, skip, etc.) The teacher will also designate whether to do the exercise the number of times posted at the bottom of each square on the left, center, or right.
2. You must change walls each time you are ready to fill in a new square. The square you fill in must match the card with the same number on it.
3. If working in a group, one person must draw the hieroglyphic exercise in the box while everyone else does the exercise the designated number of times. (lowest #, middle #, or highest #)
4. If working in a group, the job of drawing must continually rotate to each member in your group.
5. If working individually, the drawing must be done before the exercise is complete.

Exercise Hieroglyphics Card

